Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Maritime Medical News In the Lancet (Dec. 13) there is a short report of a paper read at the Sheffield Medico Chirurgical Society, by Dr. Herbert G. M. Henry. He states that lumbar puncture was first practised in England by Dr. W. Essex Wynter, in 1889. (Dr. Wynter's first case in which he attempted continuous drainage, ended fatally. It is to Quincke, of Kiel, we owe the establishment of the proceeding). For some years there was considerable hesitation on the part of the profession in making use of the method, but it is now thoroughly established not only as a therapeutic measure, but for the purposes of diagnosis, and if strict antiseptic precautions are taken it is perfectly safe. As a diagnostic method, three points are to be noticed. Firstly an indication is given of the intrameningeal pressure. In healthy persons in the horizontal position the pressure of the cerebrospinal fluid averages 125 millimetres of water pressure, in the sitting posture this may rise to 400. (In the Toronto General Hospital a few weeks ago, in a cerebellar case the pressure rose to over 1200 m.m. in a mercurial manometer.) Secondly, the chemical examination of the fluid gives valuable results. The presence of albumin indicates organic disease. In normal cerebrospinal fluid there is a substance possessing the power of reducing the salts of copper, as sugar does. It was at one time considered to be a form of sugar, but it does not conform to the chemical tests for any type of sugar. Its absence is characteristic of many forms of meningitis. Lastly, the examination of the sediment, for cellular elements, blood cells,...
