She was an old moon: though she was high in the sky, the thinnest of gray lines in the far east warned the rebellious elements that they had not much time left to smooth themselves into a fitting smile of welcome for the sun. Already the wind had sunk into the dead silence that so often follows a more than usually furious gale; and the silver road of the moon was unbroken save by a few black hollows here and there. But the waves were still heaving and swelling against the huge wall of rock with a thundering force that outlasted the strength of the wind that had called them into fury. It was one of those scenes where Nature is all in all - where the deepest human interest is like a blot and an intrusion. None was likely to intrude. All who had the...
